

DOOM OF SANTO DOMINGO'S PRESIDENT PLOTTED HERE

Party of Dusky Patriots Sails for Puerto Rico After Meetings.

$1,500,000 AT STAKE IN THE TREASURY

Proceeds of Customs Administration Under American Guardianship May Revert to Caceres.

REVOLUTION WELL FINANCED

Arms, Ammunition and Vessels Said to Be at Command of Morales and Jimenez for Action.

PRINCIPAL FIGURES IN THE STRUGGLE FOR POWER WHICH HAS RENT SANTO DOMINGO, AND WILL AGAIN.

Something Doing.

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

Revolutionist by Birth. Juan Francisco Sanchez is one of the most interesting men of the galaxy. He is a revolutionist both by inheritance and by habit. His father was conspicuous in the movement which freed Santo Domingo from the thralldom of France and Hayti. Sanchez the younger, now a man of middle age, has been prominent in all revolutions in the island in the last decade and was Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Cabinet of Morales until the Horacista party, gradually undermining Morales by getting control of his Cabinet, supplanted Sanchez with Emiliano Tejera, one of the most trusted of his civil leaders. Sanchez was promptly forced into exile with Morales, his chief, though his family still remained in Santo Domingo.

Señor Sanchez was reticent on Friday when a reporter for the Herald sought to interview him in the Hotel America. He admitted that he had been in Washington recently and that he feared the pending Roosevelt treaty with Santo Domingo would not obtain the requisite number of votes in the Senate to insure its ratification. When asked whether he supposed that in that event the United States government would withdraw its ships of war from the harbor, he said that he did not know, but that he believed that the United States would not do so.

General Jimenez There. General Juan Jimenez was one of these. He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power. Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front. Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars. He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition. His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months. Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel Muro, near the Europa, in Fourteenth street, west of Sixth avenue, but he sailed yesterday for San Juan by the Puerto Rico steamship line, accompanied

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months.

Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel Muro, near the Europa, in Fourteenth street, west of Sixth avenue, but he sailed yesterday for San Juan by the Puerto Rico steamship line, accompanied

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months.

Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel Muro, near the Europa, in Fourteenth street, west of Sixth avenue, but he sailed yesterday for San Juan by the Puerto Rico steamship line, accompanied

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months.

Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel Muro, near the Europa, in Fourteenth street, west of Sixth avenue, but he sailed yesterday for San Juan by the Puerto Rico steamship line, accompanied

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months.

Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel Muro, near the Europa, in Fourteenth street, west of Sixth avenue, but he sailed yesterday for San Juan by the Puerto Rico steamship line, accompanied

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

Hatching The Plot.

speaking of the treaty on Friday than he was in Santo Domingo City a year ago. Emiliano Leon, the third personality in this aggregation of patriots, is a prominent commission merchant of Santo Domingo City. He came here with General Sanchez and for about three weeks has been busy part of the time in this city and part of the time in Washington. He is a man of means and is reported to be one of those who stand ready to assist in financial enterprise which General Morales and his followers may launch upon the sea of political fortune.

Ferdinand Bancalari, who arrived from Paris and Italy with his wife last Friday and went to the Hotel America, also said that he was ready to assist in financial enterprise which General Morales and his followers may launch upon the sea of political fortune. He is a man of means and is reported to be one of those who stand ready to assist in financial enterprise which General Morales and his followers may launch upon the sea of political fortune.

MONOPOLY OF WHARFAGE. Señor Bancalari among other lucrative assets enjoys a monopoly of the wharfage privilege in Santo Domingo City, and every vessel that ties up there pays tribute to his treasury. He, too, is said to be in thorough sympathy with the Morales party and with General Jimenez, and his bank account will probably aid materially their future enterprises.

It was General Sanchez, who, with Commander Dillingham, of the United States Navy, signed the original protocol between this country and Santo Domingo, which has proved to be a source of contention ever since. He is well known in Washington and is regarded as one of the ablest men in the affairs of the turbulent island. A year ago, as the chief Minister of Morales' Cabinet, he shared with his chief the sincere hope that the treaty might be ratified. Its ratification would then have insured a substantial tenure of office for the Morales government, and would have opened the way for the Morales party to establish the Caceres government and would leave Morales and his followers little opportunity to regain their lost power. General Sanchez, it was observed, was far less enthusiastic in

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months.

Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel Muro, near the Europa, in Fourteenth street, west of Sixth avenue, but he sailed yesterday for San Juan by the Puerto Rico steamship line, accompanied

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months.

Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel Muro, near the Europa, in Fourteenth street, west of Sixth avenue, but he sailed yesterday for San Juan by the Puerto Rico steamship line, accompanied

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months.

Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel Muro, near the Europa, in Fourteenth street, west of Sixth avenue, but he sailed yesterday for San Juan by the Puerto Rico steamship line, accompanied

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months.

Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel Muro, near the Europa, in Fourteenth street, west of Sixth avenue, but he sailed yesterday for San Juan by the Puerto Rico steamship line, accompanied

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

drove around the city with Mr. Dawson and was largely instrumental in obtaining the assent of various foreign diplomatic representatives to the arrangement now in force.

Henrique Jimenez, a nephew of General Jimenez, also was in New York until he returned recently to San Juan. He was a prominent member of the provisional Ministry of Carlos Morales before the latter became constitutional President, a year ago last month.

When the present movement assumes a martial aspect and moves upon Santo Domingo from its base of operations in Puerto Rico General Henrique Jimenez is expected to take a conspicuous position in whatever fighting may follow. Morales himself has never been accused of cowardice and he is likely to be found well to the front in any effort having for its purpose the restoration of his lost authority. The older Jimenez, it is said, though he has occupied the Presidential chair, will be content to be the power behind the throne until Morales shall have had the opportunity to finish what his followers regard as his unexpired term. Should this much of the programme be carried out successfully and should the Jimenezes succeed in thoroughly ousting the Horacista General Juan Jimenez would probably not be averse to succeeding Morales as the next President.

AMERICAN IN THE PARTY.

In the Hotel Colombia, a Spanish-American caravansary in West Fourteenth street, was found Captain J. Francis Sheridan, one of the most picturesque members of the colony from Santo Domingo and the only native American in the party. Captain Sheridan might fairly be termed a sailor of fortune. From 1887 until 1898 he served with credit in the United States navy on the Constellation, the Ossipee, the Galena and the Kearsarge. He was promoted to the rank of captain, and after a regular course in the Newport torpedo station brought away in May, 1891, a first class certificate and finally an honorable discharge from the navy.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months.

Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel Muro, near the Europa, in Fourteenth street, west of Sixth avenue, but he sailed yesterday for San Juan by the Puerto Rico steamship line, accompanied

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months.

Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel Muro, near the Europa, in Fourteenth street, west of Sixth avenue, but he sailed yesterday for San Juan by the Puerto Rico steamship line, accompanied

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months.

Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel Muro, near the Europa, in Fourteenth street, west of Sixth avenue, but he sailed yesterday for San Juan by the Puerto Rico steamship line, accompanied

by Juan Francisco Sanchez, Emiliano Leon and Ferdinand Bancalari.

General Jimenez was one of these.

He is the titular chief of the popular Jimenez party, which is the traditional enemy of the Horacistas, now in power.

Jimenez was President of Santo Domingo for two years, which was more than double the average term of office of the Chief Executive in that country since the old despot, General Heureaux, was assassinated after a reign of eighteen years by Ramon Caceres, now the President.

General Jimenez was succeeded by Wos y Gil, whose exaltation lasted barely three months and who was then driven into exile by a revolution in which Morales, as the leading chief of the Horacistas, forged to the front.

Morales was the Governor of Puerto Plata, and after Wos y Gil had been suppressed his growing influence enabled him to assume the Presidency and pursue the Jimenez for a time into the background.

Jimenez has since been living in San Juan, Puerto Rico. Not many years ago his fortune was supposed to amount to a million dollars.

He transacted a large business as a commission merchant, with offices in Battery place, this city, and also in Paris and London, and two of the commodities in which he dealt most extensively from time to time were firearms and ammunition.

His fortune, however, is now said to have been reduced to about $250,000, but he has cemented his old friendship with Carlos Morales and is believed to be helping to finance the new revolution, which is expected to try to dislodge Morales from power within a few months.

Until yesterday General Jimenez had been staying in the Hotel